Well Known Resident of Near Cashtown Dies after a Year's Illness with Tuberculosis. Funeral on Sunday Afternoon.

Edward D. Sheely, one of the best known residents of the western part of the county, died at noon Friday at his home in Franklin township, near Cashtown, after a year's illness with tuberculosis aged 48 years.

Mr. Sheely was a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Noah Sheely and resided with a number of brothers and sisters on the old home farm. He leaves five sisters and three brothers, Mrs. Edward Rebert, Cashtown; Mrs. Charles Stockslager, Philadelphia; Miss Florence Sheely, Miss Hettie Sheely, Miss Alice Sheely, Daniel Sheely, Robert Sheely and Andrew Sheely, living on the home farm.

The funeral will be held from his late home at one o'clock Sunday afternoon. Services at the house. Interment in the cemetery at Arendtsville. Friends are requested to accept this as notice of the funeral.

SAMUEL G. HECK

Samuel G. Heck, until three years ago a resident of Gettysburg, died on Friday evening at half past six o'clock at the home of a nephew, S. J. Yiengst, in Boiling Springs. He was aged 82 years and 7 months.

Mr. Heck formerly resided on South Washington street. With his wife he moved to New Oxford about three years ago. They stayed there but a short time and Mrs. Heck died soon after their return to this place. Mr. Heck then went to Boiling Springs where he had since been living with Mr. Yiengst, his nearest relative.

Funeral Monday morning in the Gettysburg United Brethren church immediately after the arrival of the 9:15 train over the Reading. Interment in Evergreen Cemetery.

Friends will accept this as notice of the funeral.

GET THROUGH CAR

Will Help out Local Express Men in their Work.

So great has the volume of express business become here that it has been found necessary to put on a through car to carry the matter between Philadelphia and Hagerstown, through Gettysburg. Beginning Monday the Reading train arriving here at 9:15 in the morning will bring a through car which goes out at 10:08 over the Western Maryland. In the afternoon it returns at 3:44 over the Western Maryland and goes out at four o'clock on the Reading. All trains, particularly the morning and night express trains, carry an enormous volume of express and the work of transferring here is a great task. The through car service will relieve the day force of their hardest work but the night force will continue to have their hands full.

BRICK PLANT GETS CONTRACT

Local Institution to Furnish Bricks for Hundred Thousand Dollar Mansion in Baltimore. Finest Kind of Building Material.

One of the best orders received by the Auburn Shale Brick Company recently was one secured this week calling for 100,000 of the finest bricks made at the plant. They are to be used in the construction of a Baltimore residence the estimated cost of which is $100,000.

The bricks to be shipped will be of the dark velvet face variety which have recently come into such great popularity and for which the local plant has received considerable notice. The bricks made here are said to compare most favorably with similar bricks from other plants and inquiries have been received from many sections, indicating a big market for the product.

Included in the shipments to be made to Baltimore are 3000 special hand-made bricks of three different shapes. They are all to be beveled and used in the water courses about the foundations, special shapes also being made for the corners of the mansion. Possibly more care will have to be exercised in the execution of this order than any previous order put out at the Gettysburg plant.

The plans for the house in which they will be used are most pretentious. Among other things, the building is to contain fourteen bathrooms, eight on the one floor and six on another.

ISSUES WARNING

Kalbfs Says Law Requires Tag on Hunter's Arm.

Dr. Joseph Kalbfus has issued a warning to all hunters that they must display hunters' license tags and that men who hunt with receipts only will get into trouble. He says that the tag is the greatest protection that the farmer has against careless hunters who may tramp down the fields and serve as a means of identification.

In a statement Dr. Kalbfus said: "When the bill requiring tags was being considered by the Legislature, representatives of the grange in this State, Mr. Creasy, Democratic candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, and many others interested in agricultural pursuits, demanded of those pushing this measure that a particular feature of the bill should be the wearing of a tag by those engaged in hunting. The farming interests of this State gave this bill their endorsement because of the acceptance of this provision."

Dr. Kalbfus says that it is the duty of the commission to enforce the law requiring display of the tag, and that attention has been called to it time and again. He closes his statement by saying that he is perfectly willing to have the matter tested in the courts and believes that the farmers of the State will strenuously oppose the effort to create sentiment for repeal of the clause requiring display of the tag.

FULL GALLONS OF COAL OIL

Town and County Merchants Found to be Giving Short Measure but Sealer Fixes their Pumps and Purchaser will Benefit.

When you light your coal oil stove to take away the chill of an early fall evening, or when you light your kerosene lamp, you can now be sure that the merchant gave you a full gallon of oil and that your are burning something in which you got full value for your money. Six months ago it is most probable you could not have had that satisfaction.

In his rounds of the stores in the towns and townships of Adams county, Sealer of Weights and Measures Raffensperger has found almost no coal oil pumps where full measure was given. In almost every instance people got considerably less than a gallon of oil though, in justice to the store-keepers, it must be said that the majority of them did not know of their short measures.

The difficulty came principally in those stores where coal oil is measured by a pump, the amount taken out being told through the revolutions given. The adjustment screw on nearly every one of these pumps was incorrect and as much as a pint shortage on a gallon of oil was noted. Frequently the merchant declared that he had not adjusted the screw from the time he bought the pump until the visit of the Sealer. Mr. Raffensperger was able to make the necessary change and now the customer gets the full gallon.

It remained for Adams County's sealer to get the scales of some Hanover dealers. York City has a sealer, but no such official has been appointed for York County. Mr. Raffensperger spent the past week in McSherrystown and, while there, tested the scales of some Hanover hawkers and junk dealers visiting the Adams County town. In many cases their scales were off in weight and they were confiscated. Several junk dealers in Adams County also had their scales taken up, weighing from six to ten pounds short on material of from twenty five to forty pounds.

Mr. Raffensperger found many good, new scales in the stores of McSherrystown but had to caution the merchants about selling beans by the liquid measure instead of by the pound, and also about giving less than sixty pounds to the bushel of potatoes. He has pretty nearly made his rounds of the county now, Abbotstown and Fairfield alone remaining for his work, while one or two places in Littlestown and one in Brunsdown are to be visited.

The Sealer has been on duty almost continuously since May first last, the task proving to be a heavy one.

GIRARD COLLEGE BOYS' BIG TIME

Those sixty Girard College boys had the time of their young lives in Gettysburg Friday evening, when, relieved of their strict discipline at the Philadelphia school, they were allowed to enjoy themselves to the full.

First in their program of amusement was the securing of the ever present lolly pop and, armed only with these, they marched south on Baltimore street to the cyclorama building where they viewed the great battle picture with genuine delight. Returning to town they found an hour's fun at a local moving picture house and then did further maneuvering, forming in a column and parading over the various streets.

Centre Square was their main area of activity and here they lined up for a mock foot ball game. The Eagle Hotel was merry with the laughter of the youngsters during the early hours of the night but their discipline soon told and there was no "rough house", as one of them remarked.

This morning they returned to Philadelphia. Girard College has an enrollment of about 1500 boys. No minister or clergyman is permitted at the school, their sole training along religious lines being in the form of lectures by men of prominence.

BOGUS STORY

Local Paper Gives Fake News Item of Finding Child's Body.

A newspaper's reliability is its strongest asset. The Star and Sentinel this morning published as its leading news item an account of several boys finding the decomposed body of an infant near Virginia Mills. The paper in question states that "Squire Spangler took charge of it and notified Coroner Woomer of Cashtown."

When the coroner was called this morning he stated that he had heard nothing of the affair, but later upon instructions of District Attorney Wible, investigated the report through Squire Spangler, to find that there was no truth whatever in the entire story. Several boys found some old logs in the mountain but there was no sign of a dead body about.

ACCUSED FIRM IN DENYING GUILT

Mrs. Carman Is Bitterly Cross
Examined.

FALTERS AFTER ORDEAL

Her Testimony Denying Participation
In Crime Is Upheld by Husband
Mother, Sister and Daughter.

Mineola, N. Y., Oct. 24.—Mrs. Florence Conklin Carman, on trial for the murder of Mrs. Louise D. Bailey, passed through the bitter ordeal of cross examination.

Her testimony, denying all participation in the crime, was unchanged. When she had ended members of her household followed her to the stand and swore that what she had testified to was true.

Mrs. Sarah Conklin, Dr. Edwin S. Carman, Mrs. Ida Powell, Elizabeth Carman—mother, husband, sister and daughter—one by one affirmed her contention that she was in bed when the shot was fired; that she donned kimono and slippers, went downstairs into the waiting room, leaned for a minute or two against the mantel piece and then returned to her room.

Elizabeth, who is ten years old, testified that she, too, went down the stairs behind her mother, stayed there but a moment, returned, and in a minute or two went into her mother's room.

"My mother was there," she said. Dr. Carman, during his cross examination by the district attorney, admitted that he had seen Mrs. Bailey before the tragedy, and that he "believed it was the night before."

Dr. Carman also testified that the assassin's hand thrust through the window of his office was that of a man. The defense, in order to substantiate this contention, called to the stand Charles Adams, a negro youth who testified that he heard the shot and immediately saw a man dash across the Carman lawn from the direction in which the shot was fired.

This is the first time that Dr. Carman has indicated that he had seen Mrs. Bailey before the night of the murder.

Dr. William Rundle, of Freeport, told of being called to the home of Dr. Carman on the night of June 30, and of seeing the body of a woman on the porch.

"Was she dead or alive?" "Dead," "Did you go upstairs that night?" "Yes."

"Did you see Mrs. Carman?" "Yes," "How was she dressed?" "In a kimono."

"Did you speak to her?" "Yes."

"What did she say?" "She told me that she had a dictograph in the doctor's office and she didn't want him to know it."

Platt Conklin, the father of the defendant, followed. Conklin, seventy-six year old, with a full-grown beard and snow-white hair, told of how he was called home on June 30 from the Freeport club.

The witness then told of the gates on his property, and said that at 6:30 o'clock of that evening all of these gates were closed, but after the murder he found they had been opened. He described the condition of the window after the shooting.

Against the testimony of the Carman household, the state has the evidence of Celia Coleman, the negro maid in Mrs. Carman's home, and that of Frank Farrell, former railroad engineer.

Celia has testified that Mrs. Carman went out of the kitchen a short time before the shot was fired, reappeared a few seconds after it was fired, produced a revolver from the folds of her kimono and said: "I shot him."

Farrell has testified that he saw a woman, dressed as Mrs. Carman was dressed, flee from the window into the house after the shot.

Mrs. Carman faced her ordeal with lips parted with a smile. Once, as the district attorney, Lewis J. Smith, threw home intimate questions as to the jealousy that had stirred her concerning her husband's relations with women, she appeared to lose her splendid self-control and to falter. But smelling salts, self-administered, soon revived her.

She broke down after it was all over and cried. The reaction came when her aged mother was on the witness stand.

RUSSIA CLAIMS BIG VICTORY

Declares German Army Has Been Repulsed.

ADVANCE ON WHOLE LINE

Kaiser's Forces Approached Within Fifteen Miles of Warsaw Before
They Were Hurled Back.

Petrograd, Oct. 24.—The Russians have won a great victory over the German main forces, which are in full retreat.

The force now beaten is Germany's best army against Russia. It was operating toward Warsaw between the Bzura and the Pilzta, confluent of the Vistula.

South of the Pilzta river the German forces are still holding their positions, but this is merely a matter of time, since the Russians are now on the flank and partly in the rear of the German armies.

The Germans approached to within fifteen miles of Warsaw, and their shells reached parts of the outlying suburbs. The hardest fighting was with the forces astride of the railway from Skerniewice, within a few miles of Warsaw. The Germans apparently made their last stand here.

The Seventeenth and Eighteenth German Army corps (80,000 men) had made desperate efforts to attack here, but the Russians continued to advance, sending cavalry around the German left rear and infantry to the left flank from the fortress of Novogeorgievsk, while other forces, which had crossed the Vistula eighteen miles south of Warsaw, increasingly threatened their right. The Russians compelled the Germans to retreat and quickly turned the retreat into a rout.

When the main object of the strategic plan—namely, to crush the German active army forces, while leaving the second-rate troops of reserves and Austrians to be dealt with later—had been thus achieved, the Russians then moved forward along the whole line, some 200 miles in length, from the Carpathians to the Vistula, and are still advancing.

On the extreme south the Austrians, under German command, are suffering much more severely than the Germans on the Vistula front. South of Przemyśl the Austrian corps are only a half-organized force, the remnants being split up among various corps in confusion, caused either by distrust or mixed nationalities or as a consequence of enormous losses suffered last month in the great Galician field.

Berlin Claims Victory.

Washington, Oct. 24.—The following German official statement from Berlin was received here at the German embassy, by way of wireless:

"In regard to the Russian theater of the war, part of our forces are following the retreating enemy in the direction of Osovietz."

"Several hundred prisoners have been taken and some machine guns. Near Warsaw and in south Poland, after an undecided fight Wednesday, it was quiet, events still developing."

Przemyśl Reported Taken.

London, Oct. 24.—A Central News dispatch from Petrograd says that it is persistently rumored there that Przemyśl has been taken by the Russians, but that the report has not yet been officially confirmed.

34,200 Russians Taken.

Vienna, Oct. 24.—The Austrians have captured 34,200 Russians, twenty-five officers and fifteen machine guns, it is officially announced here.

MORE U. S. TROOPS TO CHINA

Protection of Railroad and Legations
Thrown on This Country.

Washington, Oct. 24.—The probability of increasing American forces in China along the railway from Peking to the sea, because of the withdrawal of troops of the nations engaged in the European conflict, is being considered by the war department.

The railway and legation were guarded by troops of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, Germany, Austria, Russia and Belgium. Many of those have been ordered out since the war began and the United States will probably supply the necessary additional guards.

Wilson admitted having written the letter, but he refused to answer any questions concerning it. His home was said to be in Curryville, Mo.

DEMANDS RELEASE OF THIRD OIL SHIP

U. S. Calls on England to Free Tanker Platuria.

Washington, Oct. 24.—The United States has decided to protest formally to Great Britain against the seizure of the Standard Oil ship, the Platuria, demanding her release from British detention in Stornoway, a port in the Lewis Islands, Scotland.

The protest, which is identical to that filed in the case of the Brindilla, held at Halifax, N. S., was forwarded to Ambassador Page at London.

The Platuria, which, like the Brindilla, carried illuminating oil, was similarly bound from one neutral country to another—the United States to Denmark—and had changed her registry from German to American, although her ownership was always American.

The instigation of prize court proceedings against the Brindilla was reported to the state department by Consul General Young, of Halifax, who said the announcement "did not say why the ship had been brought into port."

Officials believe that Great Britain may not intend to comply with the demand of the United States for the release of the vessel.

Many officials believed that inasmuch as the British government released the John D. Rockefeller the action in the cases of the Brindilla and Platuria would be concerned chiefly with the question of change of registry.

No such difficulty arose in the case of the Rockefeller, as there was no question that her ownership was continuously American. Both the Brindilla and Platuria before the war flew the German flag and were owned by a German subsidiary of the Standard Oil company.

AVIATOR FALLS TO DEATH

Killed at Virginia Fair When Parachute Fails to Open.

Finecastle, Va., Oct. 24.—James Hubbard, twenty-eight years old, of Gloucester, N. J., an aeronaut, was killed instantly at the fair grounds here when his parachute failed to work. He dropped 3000 feet to one of the grandstands.

He arose from the grounds, waving his hands to the 5000 persons who stood watching him. At a height of 5000 feet he was seen to drop from the trapeze, and his parachute opened. He glided down 2000 feet and swung his second parachute. This failed to open, and Hubbard shot toward the earth at terrific speed.

Women fainted, and it was thought that Hubbard would fall directly in the crowd. His body, falling upon the roof of a grandstand, was driven half way through the roof. Hubbard was dead when picked up.

TYPHOID EPIDEMIC TRACED TO A COOK

How Students of Lehigh University Were Affected.

Harrisburg, Pa., Oct. 24.—An investigation by the state department of health of the recent typhoid fever epidemic at Lehigh university, South Bethlehem, when two-score students were infected, has now definitely shown the source of the infection to have been a kitchen employee, who, though long since recovered from an attack of typhoid, still carried the germs in his system.

This conclusion was reached by Dr. Samuel G. Dixon, state commissioner of health, and was communicated to Dr. Henry S. Drinker, president of the university, in a letter reading as follows:

"After keeping in daily touch with my medical and sanitary engineers during the time they were investigating the recent typhoid fever dash, which occurred at the Lehigh university, I must, at present, hold a man servant at the institution guilty of having transmitted the micro-organism which produced the disease. It is one of the causes that is extremely hard to overcome."

"This man is what we call a 'carrier.' The organisms have lived in his system and propagated long after he was over the attack of typhoid fever. It is very unfortunate that such a thing should happen at your institution after the extraordinary care you have taken to promote the health of your students and to prevent the introduction of disease."

VILLA TO ATTACK LAREDO

Carranza's Garrison in Mexican Town
Reinforced by 1000 Troops.

Laredo, Tex., Oct. 24.—General Villa is reported to be making preparations to attack Nuevo Laredo, just over the border in Mexico.

General Carranza, an adherent of Carranza, arrived in Nuevo Laredo with more than 1000 reinforcements. He also brought machine guns and a hospital corps.

Instead of moving farther away from the American side, as was promised, General Maytorena's attacking force of Yaqui Indians has moved up closer to the Carranza garrison of Naco, Sonora, and inflicted more damage on the defenses of General Benjamin Hill than at any previous time. Many bullets fell on the American side.

CONGRESS STILL IN SESSION

Fillbuster of Cotton Men Prevents Final Adjournment.

Washington, Oct. 24.—All efforts to adjourn congress sine die failed again and the senate, by adjourning over to noon today postponed the end of the session at least another day.

Talk of President Wilson exercising his constitutional privilege and adjourning congress was general in official circles, but nothing materialized. Senate leaders hoped that some arrangement could be made to pass the bank law amendments and the cotton warehouse bill, for which cotton states members were filibustering, without the necessary quorum.

Philadelphia Ship Not Seized.

Rested After His Run.

After a wild run in South Boston, in which the animal tore down about twenty feet of a wooden fence, smashed down a section of brick wall, broke a few windows in a schoolhouse, snapped off short a lamp post and crashed through a wooden gate, incidentally damaging the sides of two buildings, not to mention injuring the three men who were on the wagon, a horse attached to a brewery wagon wedged himself in a narrow alleyway and when found was munching contentedly such grass as he could reach from his position.

The Happy Home.

Don't be afraid of a little fun at home. Don't shut your house lest the sun should fade your carpets, and your hearts lest a hearty laugh shake down some of the dusty old cobwebs there. If you want to ruin your children, let them think that all mirth and social enjoyment must be left on the threshold without when they come home at night. When once a house is regarded as only a place to eat, drink and sleep in, bad work is, indeed, begun.

For Show and for Use.

Commercially, elephants in India come under two classes—the one of pageantry, the other of utility. Every native prince or nobleman of distinction in India keeps elephants to swell his retinue, while, on the other hand, government officials and private persons, such as timber contractors, etc., require them for work.

BATTLE LINES SO CLOSE THAT SOLDIERS OFTEN TALK WITH FOES

British Cook Lost His Way Between Trenches; Nearly Fed the Germans.

Little Stories of Interest From the Scene of War in Europe.

THROUGHOUT much of the warfare in Belgium and France, the intrenched lines of the German and the allied armies approach each other so closely that the soldiers on each side, when not firing can observe quietly the movements of the men opposing them. Sometimes the trenches are only a few hundred yards apart.

In regard to this a lieutenant of an English regiment of infantry, holding Champagne, told a war correspondent that a cook of his company had only finished cooking dinner late at night. The regimental wagons had gone astray and only joined the column after 8 o'clock. When the meat had been prepared the cook started off, carrying it on a large grid iron, and in the darkness and after wandering about came across a trench. "Is this the Sixth company?" he asked. To his astonishment the soldier he addressed rose to his feet, and the cook saw that he wore a spiked helmet. The cook turned and ran for his life, followed by a storm of bullets. Strange to say, out of 100 shots fired only one hit him, inflicting a slight wound on the left arm, but the cook brought back his grilled beef dinner intact, although cold.

The hostile trenches in some places are so close that the soldiers occasionally throw hand grenades across. Wherever a head shows above the ground it receives a volley. At this short range the rifle bullets make fearful wounds. The men on both sides amuse themselves by raising caps on the points of their bayonets, with the result that the head coverings are instantly riddled with bullets.

Long voiced dialogues also occur somewhat in this fashion: "Hello, Frenchies!" "How are you, Boches (Germans)?" "How many men are there in your trench?"

"Two army corps." "Crack, crack! The bullets are nipping low across the turf close to the men taking part in the conversation. Sometimes the smallest incident precipitates a battle. In one case a cow wandered close to a French trench, and a soldier leaped out to milk it. The Germans opened fire, and the French responded until the milking was done and the dairyman descended unscathed into the trench with his pail.

A shell burst near the cow, which walked calmly toward the spot where the projectile exploded to inspect the hole in the ground. However, a moment later she was killed by a bullet and fell with her four legs sticking stiffly in the air like a Noah's ark animal.

City's Ransom Cured Prince.

One of the highest doctor's fees on record has been paid, according to the Paris Matin, in German gold at Epernay, France.

When the Germans occupied Epernay on their southward march they demanded an indemnity of 50,000 bottles of champagne, worth about $35,000. These the mayor duly produced.

Soon afterward in their retreat from the Marne they brought to Epernay a dangerously wounded imperial prince on whom an immediate operation was necessary.

As no German surgeons were present who were competent to handle the case, they appealed on humanitarian grounds to the French doctor, Veron, who successfully performed the operation.

The Germans offered him a "princely honorarium," telling him to name his own fee.

Dr. Veron promptly asked $35,000, which was at once paid in gold.

Praise For Our Consul at Ghent.

Belgian refugees in London are fond in their praise of Henry A. Johnson, the American consul at Ghent. They say they owe their lives to his firmness. When aboard one of the last steamboats leaving Ostend for Folkestone an officer of gendarmes ordered all civilians ashore, saying the vessel had been commandeered for army use. "It has not," said Mr. Johnson. "Come aboard, folks."

The officer made a motion to draw a revolver, but did not. "Come on, folks," said Mr. Johnson again. They did, and the officer of gendarmes disappeared.

Germans' Advantage in Language.

"One of the greatest needs of the allies is interpreters for both the French and British troops," says a London Standard correspondent. "When I have been in ordinary and armored motorcars this last week we have had to make peasants go in front as guides and have been absolutely at their mercy, with only the fear of our rifle to deter them from leading us straight to the Germans." When we invade Germany it will be still worse, for we won't be able to trust anybody. For English troops an interpreter who is English and can understand the Scotch, Welsh, Yorkshire and White

LONDON AWAITS AERIAL INVASION

Takes Precautions to Repel Attack by Zeppelins.

GERMANS READY FEBRUARY.

Will Need Four Months' Time For Preparation of Fleet of Dirigibles. "Wait and See," Says Inventor—"Zeppelin Neck" Due to Peering Upward, Prevalent in British Capital.

Information received in Amsterdam from an authoritative source regarding Germany's aerial plans throws a new light on the action of the London authorities in doing away with all brilliant illumination, sweeping the skies at night with many searchlights and mounting guns to assail balloons and aeroplanes. These precautions are thoroughly justified, though a bit premature, says the New York Times correspondent in Amsterdam.

While occasional minor raids may be made on London sooner, if Germany gets a firm foothold on the channel, the grand aerial armada will not be launched against England until February at the earliest, for Germany will not be ready till then.

"We are building 200 aeroplanes especially for the attack on London. These are of a new and extra large type, capable of carrying 1,000 pounds of explosives in addition to the weight of the pilot and bomb thrower," the correspondent was informed.

"These new aeroplanes will not be in commission before February. The fliers are being trained now at special aviation camps, and at least one of the instructors was flying in London as recently as last spring."

Germans' Aerial Equipment.

An American refugee from Romania, who reached London six weeks ago via Austria, Germany and Holland, told the correspondent at the time that at the flying field in Berlin he had seen at least 500 aeroplanes and fifty Zeppelins in their sheds.

When the German officer interviewed was asked if there was any truth in the statement that Germany had fifty Zeppelins six weeks ago he replied frankly: "That is nonsense. But we are working on new Zeppelins night and day and by February we shall have forty-six."

Confirmation of a sort of the planned aerial attack on London came from Count Zeppelin himself, who returned to his home in Stuttgart, Wurttemberg, after a three days' stay in Berlin.

"Give Us Time," Says Zeppelin. An American woman saw the count in Berlin and, rushing up to him, exclaimed, "Tell me, when are the Zeppelins going to London?"

Count Zeppelin bowed politely, replying: "Wait and see. Only give us time, madam."

"Zeppelin neck" is the form of malady now prevalent in London, according to one report.

This is the popular term for stiff necks, which are commoner than ever at this season because so many Londoners are craning their necks, scanning the heavens as the government searchlights relentlessly examine the sky for the enemy.

WATCH BRINDILLA CASE.

Washington and London Deeply Interested in Seizure of Oil Ship.

If in the capture of the Brindilla, the oil tank ship formerly the Washington, the British government wishes to test neutral ownership, not alleged contraband cargo or an unneutral destination, it will be appealing to a principle of international law which Great Britain has never formally ratified. There are precedents for such a course, as when both Spain and the United States in 1808 adhered to the declaration of Paris, though neither had ratified it. The case is attracting much attention in Washington and London.

The Brindilla was a ship of the Deutsch-Amerika Petroleum company, caught in New York by the war. She was bought by the Standard Oil company under the American registry act and sent out under the American flag. Outside the three mile limit she was taken and towed to Halifax and the jurisdiction of a prize court.

The declaration of London, article 56, declares void the transfer of an enemy's ship to a neutral in war "unless it is proved that such transfer is not made in order to avoid the consequences to which an enemy's vessel, as such, is exposed." The burden of proof of good faith is put upon the owners of the Brindilla by this article.

The British commons, December, 1911, passed a naval prize act accepting the declaration of London. The lords rejected it. Yet it has passed by usage into the common law of nations, was embodied in declarations by Russia and Italy during the Tripoli war and is admitted in principle by the present belligerents. If an appeal is taken from the prize court to the Hague that tribunal is bound by the convention establishing it to decide in accord with international law, or, if no "recognized rule" exists, to follow "the general principles of justice and equity."

The Modern Woman.

"She is an extraordinary woman, you know. She paints, plays, rides horseback, boxes, plays foot ball, golf and is an aviator. It is too bad. If I knew how to darn my own socks I should marry her."

ONLY FOUR WEEKS OF THE CAMPAIGN

Much is to be Done in Remaining Time and only those who Work with a System Can Accomplish Enough to be a Winner.

With the close of the present week, just one half of the time of the Times-News contest is over. Four weeks from to-night, the last subscriptions must be in and the last votes will be written. The judges will go over and count the ballots and the winners of the prizes will be determined from their count.

The first half of this great campaign has been a rousing success and the indications are even better for the last half. But, as in all other affairs of such size, considerable time was required to start this contest and as a consequence, but a comparatively small part of the real work of the campaign has been done. Really but a small part of the territory has been gone over thoroughly, less than half of the possible subscribers have been asked for their subscriptions.

That means that the next four weeks must be busy ones for those who expect to win one of the prizes. The territory is large and the time is short so that, from now on, it will be necessary to work with a system so that every possible moment will be used to the very best of advantage.

Do not skip about from place to place and leave others in between. Lay your plans each day so that you can cover a certain territory and so that you can cover that territory thoroughly. Leave nothing undone and then it will not be necessary to go over the same field twice and you will be sure that you have taken every subscription possible.

They Come High. "My darling," she murmured, "you were so grand, so noble, when you proposed to me that day in the automobile! Shall I ever forget how touchingly you spoke of your future, of the sacrifices you would make for me? It must have cost you something to speak those words." "It did, Mabel," replied the young man, a shadow creeping over his face. "It cost me about two weeks' salary for the auto hire."

Had the Right Idea. The tailor's sign in a little inland town was an apple—simply an apple. The people were amazed at it. They came in crowds to the tailor, asking him what on earth the meaning of the sign was. The tailor, with a complacent smile, replied: "If it hadn't been for an apple, where would the clothing business be today?"

CHAPTER I.

My Novelette.

While I was playing the part of Dr. Della Whitmore in the photo-comedy drama, "Chip of the Flying U" the Power-That-Is in the moving-picture company that was producing the play suggested that I write my impressions of this story in the form of a short novel. The deeper I entered into the part of "the little doctor," as I was called in the play, the more charmed I became with the entire production. The result was that I approached my task of novelizing my impressions of this story, not with halting pen, but with gusto, and on a typewriter speeding under the manipulation of fingers that were glad to work.

I must first remind you that "Chip of the Flying U" is a novel by B. M. Bower, and that from this novel the photoplay in which I played the leading part was dramatized for the camera. Both the novel and the photoplay unfold the story from the viewpoint of the principal man character, namely, Chip. In this novelette of mine, however, I am presenting the story entirely from the viewpoint of the principal woman character, namely, Dr. Della Whitmore, the part which I played with all my heart because of my love for this refreshingly sweet character and my fondness for all the other characters in this delightful story of a Montana ranch. Therefore now, as I take the photoplay unfold to you just as it impressed me during its production, you should remember that I am writing for the heroine, in the first person singular. Hence the one who is telling this story now is Della Whitmore, M. D.—"the little doctor."

I, Della Whitmore, in the morning of my life—I was in the early twenties—and in the evening of my day—it was about 8:00 p. m.—arrived home from college. With me was my classmate, Cecil Grantham. Did I say home from college? I should have said home from college plus home from also a three years' course in a hospital. For both Cecil and myself were now, this evening at 8:00 p. m., full-fledged M. D.s. We had both been graduated from the medical college and both had finished our necessary training in the hospital. Of course all we had to show for our pains up to this minute were several nice, clean, herbiboned diplomas. Neither of us had as yet had a real case of our own. We hadn't even a shingle to hang out. We hadn't even a place where we could hang out the shingle, even if we had a sign of that kind.

My home was in the city of New York. The ruler and sovereign of that home was my bachelor brother, Jack Whitmore. For some reason people always called Jack the "old man"—though goodness knows Jack wasn't so awfully old. Fact is, he wasn't very much older than I, his sister. I suppose people called Jack "the old man" for no more sane reason than that which caused them to call me "the little doctor." For I was not so awfully little, you know. I was tall enough and strong enough to support the form of the huskiest of sick men, if he needed such support, clean across a hospital ward.

Now this evening, at eight, when Cecil and I had removed our wraps and had been thoroughly kissed by my brother Jack, the first important thing Jack told us was the following: "Della," said he, "I've bought a ranch in Montana!" I exclaimed, "Goodness! What for?" "It's called 'The Flying U,'" he replied, "and I'm going to take possession at once."

Whereupon in sheer transports of joy at the prospect of taking possession of his Montana ranch he kissed us both again. Oh, yes, Jack was not sparing in his kisses when Cecil was around. It was supposed, don't you see, to be just a brotherly kiss for both Cecil and myself. In the light of my own insight into the human heart, however, and more particularly my insight into the human heart of Jack Whitmore, I positively knew that the kisses he so chivalrously bestowed upon Cecil Grantham, M. D., that evening were not at all just brotherly, but were secretly very much of the lovely sort.

Our parents were dead. And brother Jack had always kept house, bachelor-wise, keeping this a home to which I could come to rest in my vacations and even for week-ends during my training at the hospital. The result was that now the tears welled into my eyes, and I cried in dismay: "But, Jack, what am I to do when you break up this home and go to that awfully far-away ranch in Montana?" "You are going with me," he said, with tyrannical brevity, as if his mere word settled the matter.

"Going with you?" cried Cecil, in chagrin. "Then what's to become of me? I thought we were both to hang out our shingles on the front of this house and wait for patients."

"You let me handle this matter, Cecil," I put in. Then, turning to Jack with determination and finally, I said: "Jack Whitmore, you go to your ranch, if you wish. I'm going to stay right here and build up a practice as a doctor. Women doctors are as scarce in this city as one-armed ladies. And I guess Cecil and I have both got a nice, fat chance to succeed. So there!" Jack laughed, his whole-souled, hearty laughter that was ever so contagious. The result was that Cecil laughed too.

Immediately, then, I got mad. "What are you two laughing at?" I snapped. "This is no laughing matter. Here is Jack going to break up our home. And you and I, Cecil, will have to bunk away in some dingy flat."

"Nothing like that," Jack now said, seeing that Cecil was herself on the verge of tears. "You two can occupy this house rent free just as long as you like. Hang out your shingles and practice on a lot of patients who will never pay their bills. And when you get tired of living on bread and water, you just hike out to the Flying U ranch and have some real grub. See?"

"Nothing of the sort!" I answered, with dignity. "Dr. Cecil Grantham and myself herewith promise you, brother Jack, that you will never see us at the Flying U until we have both built up a good, paying practice and have, by hard work and diligence—I believe that's the word, diligence—earned a vacation."

"All right, then, Della," my brother said. "It's understood that you come forthwith to the Flying U to spend your vacation, both of you, as soon as you've earned said vacation."

And so the matter was settled. The next day my brother moved bodily out of his nice, well-furnished brownstone front in New York and took a state-room in a Pullman that would in due time land him at a station in Montana twenty miles from the ranch which he had bought, lock, stock and barrel—with barns, corrals, ranges, cattle, cowboys and all that sort of thing that goes to make up a modern ranch.

And here were Cecil and I in possession of Jack's house, rent free. In due time we hung out our shingles and waited for patients. And at last the first patient rang up—but the story of that very first patient of mine is a separate chapter.

CHAPTER II.

My First Patient.

At the moment when the telephone rang announcing that very first really-truly patient of mine I was sitting in our "waiting room"—namely the parlor, reading an article in the Medical Review telling of the "nerves" of women. The article set forth sundry facts as to how many women are not ill at all when they call for a doctor, but are just "nerves." They merely want a doctor as a consolation, not as a remedy.

And, would you believe it, the voice on the phone said: "I've heard of you, Doctor Whitmore, from a medical friend of mine at the hospital. My wife is all nerves and she fancies she would like a woman doctor. So can you kindly come at once? I am Mr. William Bennett, Fifth avenue, opposite the Buckingham hotel."

The name of William Bennett paralyzed me. I couldn't say a word, simply hung up. And I myself hung limp on the phone cable. And as in a dream I heard Cecil saying: "What ails you, anyway?"

I told her. She didn't get limp at all. She sprang up and threw her arms around me and commanded me to get my things on at once and "beat it!"

"Bennett!" she cried, as I grabbed my doctor's bag. "Why, he's the president of the big bank in which your brother has his account. He's a M. D. He's richer than Rockefeller, or at least nearly so. Anyway—say, he's a nice fat fellow!"

"How unprofessional and how mercenary!" I exclaimed. "You must not think of fees when you're a doctor," I protested.

"Bosh!" was Cecil's comment, and forthwith she shoved me out of the house.

Well, I met the great Bennett. And he conducted me up a flight of velvet-carpeted stairs to a gloriously furnished bedroom, where Mrs. Bennett lay in the most beautiful of beds, terribly distressed about something. I could not at first make out just what.

Bennett left us alone, thank goodness! I perceived that Mrs. Bennett was just a case of nerves, as the Medical Review had pointed out, and that all she wanted was consolation. I questioned her rather cleverly—yes, I'm sure I acted with cleverness with this, my very first patient. I did not examine her pulse, nor ask her to stick out her tongue, nor anything like that. I did nothing that smacked of a professional visit. I made it seem, rather, that I had come as a confessor. In short, I diagnosed her case with such extreme frankness and such brutal candor that she herself at last laughed and confessed that I was right and that she wasn't sick at all, but just had a case of nerves.

"And the important thing now, Mrs. Bennett," I said, "is what is on your nerves? As my chum, Dr. Cecil Grantham, would say, 'What ails you, anyway?'"

"My son," she replied, laconically. "Well," I drawled.

"Well," she said, "my son has gone West."

"Well?" I again drawled.

"Well, he's gone to Montana—and he went away because his father said he was no good as a clerk in the bank—and because he would insist on painting pictures in office hours—and because—well, because."

"But because what?" I insisted. And forthwith then she poured out the story which she had all along been just dying to tell me.

It seems that her son, Claude Bennett, had returned from college obsessed by the idea that he was meant to be a great artist. Nothing could keep him away from oils and pastels and etchings and art museums and easels and canvases. But his father had different ideas. His father judged that Claude should be a banker and a business man and engage thus in an occupation that would yield cash revenue instead of criticisms in the papers and the flattery of sycophants who always surround a rich artist. And that's why Claude had been put to work in his father's bank instead of going to an art school to "finish."

And right here let me tell you that I am relating in every particular these facts about Claude Bennett for a good and sufficient reason. Claude Bennett already interested me. He was a man, seemingly, after my own heart. He wished to engage in a profession. And he stalwartly adhered to his intention to stick to that profession despite his father's objections and in spite of his father's pooch-pooching of the "artistic temperament" and all that sort of young man's talk.

Mrs. Bennett told me how the matter had reached its crisis. It seems that Claude, while at his desk in the bank, had been caught red-handed making a picture. He had been caught making a copy of a famous painting. The bank cashier—who was also the bank manager—had witnessed this crime in office hours as committed by the president's son. And in horror the cashier had flown to the fond parent in his private office and communicated to him the fateful news.

"Mr. Bennett," the cashier had said, "your son is not earning a tenth part of his salary. Instead of learning banking he persists in practicing the profession of a painter. He paints pictures when he ought to be filling out sight drafts on Milwaukee and Trenton."

Straightway dutifully appeared the son, Claude, with his fingers all colors of the rainbow after dabbing them in his paints, and his clothing like a rainbow from his carelessness with his palette.

"Son," roared the older Bennett, president of the bank. "What in all the furries do you mean by painting pictures when you should be filling out sight drafts on Milwaukee?"

Son laughed. Father roared some more. You see, the son was like the lion on the lion. The lion could roar, but what was the use?

"Son," roared elder Bennett, "either you give up this paint stuff, or else you get out of my bank and shift for yourself. I don't want any artistic temperaments loafing around my bank nor my house. Understand?"

"Perfectly," replied the self-assured son. "In that case, dad, since you so strenuously and unreasonably object to your son and heir following the noble profession of Whistler and Millet and Sargent, why the prodigal will just vamoose. Fact is, dad, I'll beat it West."

"West?" gasped the elder Bennett. "You mean to say you'll chuck up all I provide for you—your motor, our mansion, everything—to go West where there isn't anything but grass and sand and sagebrush?"

"Sure thing," replied son. "Good-by, dad. I'll start at once. But before I go let me tell you some little truths that nobody else has the courage to tell you. Those men who work for you at those desks out there are all of 'em just so many slaves. They are shackled to your desks and tethered to your salary drawer. They aren't just their souls are their own. They just put their noses to their books and bend their backs to your managers and are perpetually in mortal fear of losing their jobs. None of that in mine, dad. I'm no slave. I'm a freeman. The long grass and freedom for mine—with my painting outfit. Good-by!"

Whereupon Claude Bennett resigned from the bank and guffawed in the faces of the bank managers and the slaving clerks and betook him self away from that august institution of money and went home and packed up his clothes and his paints and bade good-by to his loving mother—and beat it West.

And that was why Mrs. Bennett was now down with a case of sheer nerves. The shock to her nerve system had been something dreadful. To think of her son, her darling boy, roving the wild and woolly West with a box of paints. Goodness! It was fierce!

"And where has your son landed, Mrs. Bennett?" I now asked.

"Montana!" she replied.

"Montana!" I exclaimed. "Why, that's where my own brother has gone. He's been in Montana now some few weeks."

"So's my son," replied Mrs. Bennett. "And where do you suppose he is now?"

"No cross, no crown, me boy."

"He's a cowboy—think of it, a cowboy—my son a cowpuncher!—on a ranch."

"Ranch! What ranch?"

"The Flying U."

"I didn't say a word. I was too paralyzed by the littleness of this great big world. The Flying U! Why, that was my brother's ranch. And if Claude Bennett was a cowboy on that ranch it meant that Claude Bennett was an employee of my brother Jack. For some reason I was already so deeply interested in Claude Bennett that I somehow—perhaps intuitively—wanted to have some secret to myself that concerned him. So I just did not say a word to Mrs. Bennett about Claude being on my brother's ranch, and therefore surely in good hands."

"And what do you suppose they call him?" Mrs. Bennett now exclaimed. "They've nicknamed him. It seems that every man on a ranch—every cowboy—must have a nickname. It is not according to ranch ethics to call a man by his own name. So they call him—'Chip.'"

"Chip!" I repeated, and I spoke the name with such interest that I'm sure that I blushed and nearly betrayed my thoughts, namely, thoughts of my own visit to the Flying U and my meeting with "Chip."

"Yes," supplemented Mrs. Bennett, "they call him—Chip of the Flying U."

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

HOW TO COOK SMELTS.

Of all fish the one with the most delicate flavor is the smelt. Its flesh does not always agree with an imperfect digestion, but healthy people usually appreciate this dainty and delicious fare. Greater appreciation would be shown if greater variety were used in the methods of cooking.

Broiled Smelts.—Mix half a teaspoonful of salt and a saltspoonful of pepper with two tablespoonfuls of olive oil. Place the mixture on a plate. Prepare a dozen smelts and dry them on a cloth. Arrange them on the plate and let them soak in the oil for ten minutes. Turn them and let them soak for ten minutes longer. Grill them over a clear fire for five minutes and serve with caper or tomato sauce.

Piquantly Seasoned.
Deviled Smelts.—Wash and dry twelve smelts, brush each with salad oil or melted butter, roll in curry powder and arrange on a fireproof dish. Sprinkle a little cayenne over each fish and add a few pieces of butter the size of peas (one ounce in all) and bake the fish for a quarter of an hour.

Smelts in Sauce.—Clean twelve smelts and arrange them on a fireproof dish with a teaspoonful of tomato pulp and an ounce of butter. Bake the fish for twenty minutes. In a small saucepan place half a teaspoonful of French mustard, a teaspoonful of flour, an ounce of butter and a saltspoonful of pepper. Mix the ingredients smoothly together, adding a little water if necessary. Add to it the juice from the baked smelts and stir the sauce over a moderate fire until it thickens. Pour the sauce over the smelts and serve them as hot as possible.

Flavored With Onions.
Baked Stuffed Smelts.—Take a dozen small smelts, clean and dry. Stuff with one tablespoonful of finely chopped onion cooked for three minutes in a tablespoonful of butter, to which add one-fourth cupful of finely chopped mushrooms, one-fourth cupful of soft part of oysters, which have been parboiled, drained and chopped; one-half teaspoonful of thick white sauce and one-half cupful of fish forcemeat. After stuffing smelts with the mixture sprinkle with salt and pepper and brush over with lemon juice. Place in buttered shallow plate, covered with buttered paper, and bake five minutes in hot oven. Remove from the oven, sprinkle with buttered crumbs and bake until the crumbs are brown.

Triumph of Mutes.

It was but the other day when the triumph of the deaf and dumb faced me. It was a ship just starting from Southampton to Canada. You know the unheard shouts during the last hour from the shore. There were two men, deaf and dumb, talking quietly with their fingers to the brother on board, who could reply. They were the only three that could talk freely among the unheard tumult—London Chron.

His Natural Thought.

A South Dakota railroad is noted for its execrable roadbed. A new brakeman was making his first trip over the road at night and was standing in the center of the car, grimly clutching the seats to keep erect. Suddenly the train struck a smooth place in the track and slid along without sound. Seizing his lantern, the brakeman ran for the door. "Jump for your lives!" he shouted. "She is off the track!"

Aptly Answered.

Paddy Gaffney was after getting the old-age pension, and wended his way to the post office for his first grant. Paddy couldn't write his name, but managed to make a cross all right. The postmaster, wishing to have a joke with him, said: "Now, Paddy, don't you think 'twas hardly worth your while to come so far to make that cross?" "Well," replied Paddy, "no cross, no crown, me boy."

GERMAN ATTACKS MORE VIOLENT

Fresh Troops Brought Up to Front by Invaders.

BOTH SIDES CLAIM GAINS

The Allies Make Progress Near Arras, and on Somme, While Germans Advance West of Lille.

London, Oct. 24.—Dispatches from the front, as well as the official bulletins issued in Paris, indicate that the German attack on the allied left wing in northwest France and western Belgium showed a notable increase in vigor and violence.

A Reuter dispatch from Paris says that according to trustworthy accounts fresh troops have been brought up by the Germans.

The Germans claim to have advanced south of Dixmunde and west of Lille. The allies admit they have lost ground around La Bassée, but say this is counterbalanced by gains east of Arras, and south of the Somme and the destruction of three German batteries north of the Aisne.

A wireless dispatch from Berlin says it is officially announced there that the British fleet is bombarding the city of Ostend, which is unfortified, as well as the German positions outside the city.

A heavy battle is raging about twenty miles south of the Ghent-Bruges line and north of Roulers, according to the correspondent in Sluis, Holland, of the Amsterdam Telegraph. Roulers was bombarded again by the Germans on Thursday.

"Fugitives from Roulers declare," says the correspondent, "that forty inhabitants of that town were shot by the Germans during the invaders' occupation and that all the prominent citizens were taken as hostages."

"There is no confirmation of the report that the allies have broken through the German lines near Ecluse." The report of the cutting of the German lines came in a Rotterdam dispatch to the Daily Mail. The dispatch, which lacks confirmation of any kind, said:

"The German general staff has left Ghent, and there are strong rumors of a severe German defeat. Messages from different points of the northwest frontier agree that the German coast army is being rolled up like a ribbon."

"The German cavalry has been unable to maneuver in the tangled country, and the German big guns are stuck in bogs. By a magnificent attack, it is stated, the Franco-British force have cut the German line south of Ostend."

The correspondent of the Times in northern France states that there is no foundation for the report that Bruges has been evacuated by the Germans. He says that the Germans are still in force in the neighborhood of Ostend, and that the reported retirement in the direction of Bruges is in the nature of a precautionary measure which the allied activities to the south and southwest have rendered necessary.

A dispatch from Havre to the Daily Telegraph states that the Belgians have regained the right bank of the Yser river and are prepared to move forward. This is the first intimation that the Belgians were obliged to give ground there in the recent fighting. All of the statements given out by the allies have insisted that they were valiantly resisting the German assaults. The use of the word "regained," however, would seem to indicate that the Germans at times have made advances. The dikes of this waterway have now been cut, making the situation for the Germans more difficult.

A dispatch from Rotterdam to the Daily Telegraph says that the English and French still in Ostend and other Belgian coast towns have been ordered to leave within two hours. They are obeying the mandate and are crossing the Dutch frontier.

The following are the official bulletins:

PARIS.

"On our left wing the action has continued with extreme violence, especially around Arras, La Bassée and Arras."

"The allied forces have lost ground at some points around La Bassée, but have gained to the east of Arras."

"The situation has not changed in a general way along this part of the front."

"North of the Aisne our artillery has destroyed three German batteries."

"On our left wing the very considerable German forces whose presence was reported Thursday have continued very violent attacks in the entire region between the sea and the canal of La Bassée."

"Generally speaking, the situation of the allied forces has been maintained. If the allies had to yield at certain points they have advanced at others. The enemy also has evidenced very great activity in the region of Arras and on the river Somme. To the north and to the south of this stream new have progressed, particularly in the region of Roosters (twenty miles southeast of Arras)."

"In Santerre, in the region of Verdun, and in the region of Pont-a-Mousson."

son we have had some partial successes. On the rest of the front there is nothing to report.

"To sum up: The enemy appears to be undertaking, along the major part of the front and particularly between the North sea and the Oise, a new effort, making use of corps made up of new organizations. These are composed of men recently drilled, some of them very young and others of middle age, and have staffs drawn from various parts of the army."

BERLIN.

"On the Yser canal Thursday we gained successes."

"To the south of Dixmunde our troops advanced."

"To the west of Lille our attacks were successful; we took possession of several villages."

"On the rest of the western front it is generally quiet."

KARLSRUHE SINKS 13 SHIPS IN ATLANTIC

German Cruiser Plays Havoc With British Vessels.

London, Oct. 24.—A dispatch from Tenerife, Canary Islands, to the Daily Mail reports that the German cruiser Karlsruhe has sunk thirteen British merchantmen in the Atlantic.

News of the Karlsruhe's exploit, according to the dispatch, was brought to that port by the German steamer Creffield, which arrived there with the crews of the British steamers Strathroy, Maplebraich, Highland Hope, Indrami, Rio Igassu, Farn, Niceto, Cornish City, Pruthi, Condor and Lynrowan, all of which were sunk by the Karlsruhe.

The Creffield was accompanied into port by the German steamers Patagonia, Rio Negro and Ascension.

A later message says that more than 400 men of the crews are prisoners and that the merchantmen were mostly sunk in the Atlantic. The ships were engaged in the South American trade, and their total tonnage is about 60,000.

DUKE ROXBURGHE WOUNDED

Britain Who Married Miss May Goelet Not Seriously Hurt.

London, Oct. 24.—The Pall Mall Gazette says that the Duke of Roxburghe, captain of the Scots Guard, was wounded while on service in France. His wounds, however, are not considered serious.

The Duke of Roxburghe is widely known in the United States, especially in New York, where in 1903 he married Miss May Goelet. The couple have one son, the heir to the dukedom, who was born Sept. 8, 1913.

Kaiser's Nephew Killed in Battle.

London, Oct. 24.—The conflicting reports regarding Prince Maximilian of Hesse, nephew of the kaiser, were cleared up by the war bureau. He was killed in action in the Mont Deserts region, and, with three British officers who fell in the same action, was buried in the grounds of a monastery.

Hidden Guns Kill Germans.

Amsterdam, Oct. 24.—Four thousand soldiers, wounded, were taken into Bruges, says a press report. Many Germans were killed and wounded by a hidden Belgian battery in the forest between Gits and Cortsmarck, which opened fire unexpectedly.

London, Oct. 24.—A Copenhagen dispatch to the Star says that the report has reached Stockholm from Berlin that the German attack on Belfort is succeeding, that the southern forts have surrendered and that heavy siege guns are being employed.

DOINGS OF THE VAN LOONS

SOME LETTUCE HINTS.

The soil for forcing lettuce should be a light garden loam. If it is at all heavy or clayey sand must be added until water will pass through it readily. In the raised beds it is put in from four to eight inches deep and in the solid at least eight. On top of this, for the first crop, three inches of fine manure are placed and worked well into the soil. The dressing for each succeeding crop is lighter, as some of this first heavy dressing remains over for the following plantings.

Where it is not practicable to obtain this amount of manure a light dressing of 4-8-10 fertilizer should be used to supplement, and a dressing of wood ashes raked into the surface is always beneficial.

The green fly, or aphid, is the most troublesome insect pest, but if preventive methods are used it is easily controlled. Fumigating with some form of tobacco—stems, dust or nicotine—twice a week and tobacco dust sprinkled on the beds will usually prevent its appearance.

Rot or mildew is the dread of the lettuce grower. Clean soil, careful watering, low temperature and abundant ventilation should all be employed as preventive measures. It can be checked, but seldom much remedied, by careful spraying with solutions of fungicides destroying preparations.—Country Gentleman.

MAKING UP POTASH SCARCITY.

How American Farmers Can Hold Up Crop Production.

How American farmers can eke out the limited supply of potash has been stated in a bulletin issued by F. E. Stevens, agriculturist of the Lehigh Valley railroad. Potash is necessary as a fertilizer in fields where the soil is sandy, gravel, light loam or muck.

"This is the time for every farmer to get all he can out of his farm," says Mr. Stevens. "The mere absence of one kind of fertilizer must not be allowed to stop him."

"Practically all potash comes from Germany. Importation has ceased, and the price has risen. Kelp beds on the Pacific coast are now producing some considerable potash. War has interfered with the importation of bone and nitrate of soda, sulphate of ammonia and basic slag, causing price increases.

"The phosphate mines are in this country and are practically inexhaustible. Our local supply of nitrogen in the form of dried blood and fish, tankage and cyanamide should continue normal, except that there may be some inconvenience in obtaining the reducing acids."

"No one fertilizer ingredient can be substituted for another. Most of our soils need some potash for greatest results, especially sands, gravel, light loams and mucks. 'I am convinced,' however, that we are not using sufficient phosphorus and we should increase the application of this. Lime makes inert forms of soil potash more available. Drainage, deeper plowing, deeper diskings, turning under of vegetable matter, more frequent cultivation, make all plant food in soil more available."

"The growth of a plant often depends upon the start that it gets in the spring. A hundred pounds of nitrate of soda or cyanamide per acre, when mixed with the other fertilizer or given as a top dressing, will start growth before there is sufficient heat to form nitrates in the soil."

"These suggestions will help keep up production in spite of the fertilizer situation. The agriculture of the old world, like every other industry, is being neglected, and it is bound to be profitable to us to increase production, especially in staple articles of food. If we take a step forward at this time we are bound to gain advantages in markets which we will never entirely lose."

Men and Oaks.

Once as I was botanizing under an oak I found among a number of other plants of similar height one that was dark in color with tightly closed leaves and a stalk that was very straight and stiff. When I touched it, it said to me in firm tones: "Let me alone. I am not for your collection, like other plants to which nature has given only a single year of life. I am a little oak."

So it is with a man whose influence is to last for hundreds of years. As a child, as a youth, often even as a full grown man—nay, his whole life long—he goes about among his fellows, looking like them and seemingly as unimportant. But let him alone. He will not die. Time will come and bring those who know how to value him.—Schopenhauer.

The mountain of the Rigi, in Switzerland, commands a panorama of 400 miles in circumference, which includes the lovely lake of Lucerne, and is unsurpassed for beauty. The Rigi was known to only a few travelers in the eighteenth century, but after the peace of 1815 it became a resort for the curious, the first dwelling having been erected in 1814. Now many hotels are in a flourishing condition, and it is a popular even in winter. There is a little chapel, with its walls covered with votive tablets, for many have been the victims in the ice gorges of this lofty peak.

Pipefish.

The pipefish take care of their young in a manner that is entirely peculiar. The newly laid eggs are taken care of by the male, which has a sort of fold on each side of its body. Beneath the "flaps" he keeps the eggs until the young are hatched and sufficiently grown to take care of themselves. While in the "flap" they are fed by the mother, upon whom falls the duty of foraging around for food.

No Postmortem Touch.

"Loan me $5 until Thursday, old man. If I live till then I'll surely pay you."

"All right. But if you succeed don't send anybody around to touch me for the funeral expenses."—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Honor the Scout Uniform.

The scout uniform should be regarded as a badge of honor by every scout who wears it. It should not be worn except on scout occasion and when the wearer is on scout duty.

Never wear the uniform as a means of securing personal favors in seeking a position or attending a public gathering unless scouts are specially invited guests or are to render some special service. The uniform should not be necessary to show that you are a scout.

Figures of Speech.

An old lady after returning from a visit to "the zoo" announced that she "always did enjoy a visit to the theological gardens." A servant girl describing her master's illness explained that the "doctors held a consolation and found that it was something eternal," and a lady recently remarked that when she was in Italy she "saw many people in the garbage of monks with tonsils on their heads."

Halloween Witches.

The witches get their broomsticks out to take their yearly ride. While all the big eyed elves and pixies watch them slide and glide. And frolic in the firelight, and never make a sound. Until they're hidden scamper off and steal the pumpkins round. And make the funniest lantern men that you have ever seen. To glower on the witches' games at dear old Halloween.

To Freshen Stale Bread.

Bread that is stale can be made fresh in the following way: The loaf is put in a damp cloth and put in a paper bag and place in the oven. When the bag is hot take the bread out.

SNAPSHOTS AT CELEBRITIES

General Paul G. Pau, French Army Leader.

General Paul Gerald Pau, who commands one of France's armies, is a veteran of the Franco-Prussian war and is said to be the most popular soldier in France. In the war of 1870 he lost his right arm, but continued in the service and in time rose to the head of his profession. He was made a general of brigade in 1897 and a division commander in 1903. He retired from active service in February, 1911, but in August of that year the French people demanded that he be placed on the active list and made commander in chief. General Pau declined, however, and suggested General Joffre for the post, who was appointed. The reasons he gave at the time were that he realized that he would under any circumstances be forced to retire on the score of age limit in eighteen months' time and partly, too, because he felt that by reason of his religious principles he would be an object of more or less suspicion in the anti-clerical element of the government. When the present war broke out General Joffre placed General Pau in command of an army, and he signaled his re-entry to the service by splendid work in Alsace. He was the first French general to be mentioned in the official reports.

Although in his sixty-seventh year, General Pau is in possession of his mental and physical forces. Several years ago he became a member of the French superior council of war and is known among his enemies as a commander of the first category.

A Proposal Under Difficulties

By F. A. MITCHEL

Dick Thurston and Emily Swift became engaged one night during a thunderstorm. Emily was nearly frightened to death and didn't know what Dick, who wasn't afraid of thunder, was talking about. When the storm had passed Dick said to her or, rather, began to say to her:

"Sweetheart—"

"By what right do you call me sweetheart?"

"By the right of possession. Have you not promised to marry me?"

"I promise to marry you! When did I do that?"

"Not ten minutes ago."

"You don't mean to say that you were so crazy as to talk of love with those frightful bolts striking all about us?"

"Why not? We were in no more danger than we are at all times. How do we know when we cross a street but that an automobile may knock us into eternity? At any minute one's heart may stop beating, one's—"

"Stop!"

Dick stopped and remained quiet for some time.

"Have you lost your tongue?" Emily said at last.

"You shut me up."

"I did that because you were talking so horribly."

"May I go on?"

"Of course, if you wish to."

"What was I talking about?"

She turned toward him with a glance that was intended to wither him, but said nothing.

"Oh, I remember; we were talking about the storm. It was a hummer, wasn't it?"

There was no rejoinder.

"That bolt when the flash and the thunder came together must have struck something."

The young lady pouted, but said nothing. She was fingering an ornament suspended from a gold chain about her neck.

"I wonder if it killed any one," pursued Dick.

"Perhaps it was the fool killer hunting for a victim. Maybe that's what brought it so near."

This shut the young man off again. He looked out through the window.

"See the moon shining now!" he exclaimed. "That's the finest one I ever saw. The light is brilliant."

The moonshine did not interest her. She scorned even to look at it.

"Darling," said Dick, "what makes you so cross?"

"Don't you dare call me darling!"

"Got it again right between the eyes. Do you know, Em, that I believe that our engagement, having taken place in a thunderstorm, will be fruitful of sulphur."

"Will you be good enough to explain to me what you mean by our engagement?"

"Well, I like that! I propose to a young lady. The proposition, I admit, is made under tempestuous circumstances. Nevertheless she nestles!"

"That was from fright."

"Nestling is pretty nice anyway."

"Will you go on?"

"Vergil tells us that Dido and Aeneas became engaged during a thunderstorm."

"I am not interested in Dido and Aeneas."

This was said so snappishly that it sent Dick back within himself again. He took refuge in silence.

"If you have nothing more to say to me," Emily finally broke the silence.

"I see no reason for our remaining together any longer. I have things to do."

"You wouldn't leave me, would you, just after our becoming engaged? That would be like a groom spending the honeymoon in North America and the bride in China."

She rose and was sweeping out of the room when he called to her:

"What do you wish me to do?"

"I wish you to—she balked."

"Say it all over again!"

"If you had a spark of sentiment you would know what to do."

"Well, while you were sitting close to me—frightened at the storm, you know—and I had my arm around your waist—"

"I don't remember that at all."

"Certainly not. You were too frightened to remember it. When my arm was around your waist and my ear close against your lips—I mean my lips were—"

"Never mind all that. Go on."

"I said: 'Don't be frightened, dear. Remember that you are in the arms of one who—'"

Another belated clap broke in to spoil again a tender scene. He had placed his arm about her waist and held her hand. She closed her fingers about his, as if fearing he would get away.

"I thought the storm was over," he remarked.

"I think it is. That was merely an after clap. Go on."

"I'm afraid I do and another storm comes on I'll have to do it again. That'll make three times. You might say it between two bolts."

A dazzling flash, with simultaneous thunder. He held her tightly in his arms and cried above the reverberations:

"Emmy, dearest, I love you. Will you marry me?"

Her reply was toned to rise above the thunder, which ceased suddenly:

"Yes!"

"I heard you," he said, laughing, and, notwithstanding the solemnity of the occasion, she laughed too.

Training.

"I say, old man," inquired Balbriggan; "what are you putting those toothpicks down your back for?"

"Just getting in training," replied Flannelly, "to wear my fannels, old fellow."
